Frontier Airlines Announces More Nonstop Cities for Silicon Valley

New Flights to Atlanta, Cincinnati and Colorado Springs Extend SJC's Number of Nonstop Destinations to 50; Additional Frontier Service Announced Even Before the Airline's SJC Launch on October 5

San José, Calif. – San José Mayor Sam Liccardo and Mineta San José International Airport's (SJC) Interim Assistant Director of Aviation Judy Ross joined today with Frontier Airlines' Daniel Shurz, Senior Vice President Commercial, to announce the carrier's plan for more nonstop service to multiple destinations requested by Silicon Valley travelers.

Frontier announced it is expanding its route map from Silicon Valley with nonstop flights to Atlanta, Cincinnati and Colorado Springs. This news comes in advance of the carrier's launch at SJC with service to Denver on October 5, 2017. Find fares as low as $39 at www.FlyFrontier.com.

On July 19, 2017, Frontier had previously announced the launch of service at SJC with nonstop flights to Denver, Las Vegas, Austin and San Antonio.

"We are pleased that Frontier Airlines has already decided to expand its presence at SJC, providing Silicon Valley travelers with even more convenient flight options across the U.S.," said Liccardo. "I greatly appreciate the Frontier team for their confidence and continued investments in San José."

"Frontier's news today takes SJC to a new flight level as the addition of nonstop service to three more cities marks 50 nonstop destinations served from SJC," said Director of Aviation John Aitken. "Our community is well-served with Frontier which now offers service to seven U.S. cities – three which have been unserved and four which offer more choices for travelers."

San Antonio service is a first from Silicon Valley's airport. Cincinnati and Colorado Springs were served in the past and mark a welcomed return for travelers.

Additional nonstop service to Atlanta, Austin, Denver and Las Vegas gives travelers another choice in airline and flight times.
